Tell me about a time you used multiple sources to get information? How did you decide if they were real/true/accurate?

(Immigration Inquiry Project)

In this project, we have to find out about our chosen immigrant group's (Filipino) experiences when they immigrated to Canada by brainstorming questions that will help us get information and look up some credible sources to find answers to our questions. We only had a few questions but we had found detailed and accurate information throughout this project. Me and my partner used primary and secondary sources but I mostly looked up primary sources because I can read and understand Tagalog (Filipino language). I recognized the websites were accurate because there were no ads showing and primary sources are all firsthand evidence of a person/event and were written by the actual person. I knew the primary sources that I looked up were real because the writers actually tells the readers their real-life experience in Canada and shared some advices, pros and cons of living abroad, etc. I think that the sources my group had are accurate because it reflected on what information we found so far throughout this project.
