

1) Exposition

"I'd like to inquire about a lot," the old man said, the effort of decision evident in his voice. "At my age you never know. . . ." (pg.115)

2) Rising Action

"I'd prefer an older location." The old man looked down at his unpolished shoes, embarrassed. "I mean, where trees and shrubs have had a chance to grow." (pg.115)

3) Rising Action

"I'd like a good view," the old man explained. "But more important, privacy." "That will run the price up," Mr. Jerome warned. He was not sure how much price mattered. (pg.116)

4) Rising Action

"Then it's settled." Mr. Jerome hastened to close the deal. "The contract can be worded to accord with your wishes." (pg.118)

5) Climax

On the other side of the thicket he was surprised to find Mr. Blake stooping over a high, square, white box, intent on fixing something. A bee circled slowly overhead, then dove for its target. "Ouch!" Yelled Mr. Jerome. "That cursed bee stung me. "I'm sorry ," the old man said, "but that sting cost the bee its life." (pg.119)

6) Falling Action

"How dare you operate a beehive in this cemetery?" "It's on my property. I purchased it, did I not?" (pg.119)

7) Falling Action

"Maybe it was just beginners luck," old man Blake replied modestly, "but those twenty-dollar Beginner's Beekeeping Outfits certainly work wonders. Like the advertisement said, I had over forty-five kilograms of surplus honey the first year." (pg.120)

8) Denouement

"The old man straightened and looked at him proudly. "Mr. Jerome, I have reached an important decision: I would like to by another lot."
