Self-Reflection

In Math, we started watching study matrix videos on Data Analysis and The Language of Finance. Before that, I didn't know much about statistics and only knew a little bit about interest. While watching the videos, I was taking detailed notes which proved to be very helpful. This also helped me retain the knowledge easier and faster. In data analysis, I learned about the different types of samples and populations when conducting a survey. I learned what problems statistics have when making predictions and assumptions based on the survey results. I also learned how to read the results and form conclusions. In addition, I extended my knowledge on probability and how to calculate it. In the language of finance, I learned a lot of new vocabulary like gross pay and piecework. I extended my knowledge on how to calculate salary, commission, etc. and I learned how to plan a budget. Furthermore, I learned about personal banking and the different types of bank accounts. I think that I used my critical thinking skills the most when I had to solve the practice questions. I needed these skills when I would do calculations like interest, commission, gross pay and when I had to decide if we should ask the population or a sample. Overall, I think that this was a very practical unit where I actually learned something that I could use in real life.
