Description

Going on a field trip to study geology necessitates strong communication skills to guarantee that the trip's objectives are realized and the proper reflection and assignment. Communication competence entails the capacity to successfully transmit and receive information, whether via written, verbal, or nonverbal communication.

Effective communication skills may be exhibited in numerous ways when on our Geology 12 field trip and subsequent:

Clarifying objectives: Prior to the field trip, the team leader or teacher should explicitly express the excursion's objectives to all participants. I needed to ensure I correctly understood the assignment and how to complete it on time and properly. I also followed through on translating the instructions while creating the blog post.

Active listening is a crucial component of good communication. I used it during the field trip and creation of the blog post to attentively listen to the teacher or team throughout the field trip and then explain what I learned while during the excursion.
