

"The Murderer"

By Rad Bradbury

Morgan Mitchell

Introduction

- Music constantly playing
- Everyone only speaking through their wrist radios
- The psychiatrist's son calls through the wrist radio as he is heading to visit the undiagnosed prisoner

Initiating Incident

- The prisoner, also known as the patient, Brock is introduced.
- Brock calls himself a murderer
- Brock despises technology and shows the psychiatrist how much technology enrages him by telling the psychiatrist that he has just destroyed the radio in his room

Rising Action

- Brock tells the psychiatrist in detail about every crime he has committed against different pieces of technology
- The crimes he has committed were such as shooting his television and poured a paper cup full of water into the intercommunications system

Climax

- The psychiatrist diagnosed Brock as completely disoriented by convivial
- Brock was left without a prognosis

Falling Action

- The psychiatrist left Brock in the silence of his room, away from all of the technology

Conclusion

- The world outside of Brock's cell continues to use all types of technology while Brock sits in silence

Theme

Don't lose yourself in technology. When you are too engaged and connected, you can miss out on everything